The Arrangements for the Re-tion as Viewed by a Critic Re-porter.
On Saturday evening THE CRITIC, learn-

On Saturday evening The Critic, learning that Col. Corbin was proposing a visit to Yorktown for the purpose of looking over the ground and completing arrangements for the accommodation of the visiting military, dispatched a reporter to accompany the party and load himself with such facts as might be of interest to the general public. To say that the reporters's experience was a delightful one would be far from explaining the situation. The trip thither was most enjoyable, and the location of the scene of the famous surrender could not have been better selected. Yorktown stands on a high bluff on the south bank of the York River, about twelve miles from its mouth and twenty-nine from Fortress Monroe. The soil is a sandy loam, soft and pleasant to the feet, and which, in case of heavy rains, would pack closely without mud. The site selected for the monument is a high bluff about one-fourth of a mile from the town, from whence a magnificent view of the river, leading toward the bay, lays before the vision like an exquisite bit of waterscape that it would be difficult to surpass. The block for the reception of the cornerstone has been prepared, and only awaits the mystic ceremony that shall pronounce it to be good and true, and ready for the labor of the workman. A reception hall has been completed near the monument site, and is a building 100 feet by 60, strongly built and excellently arranged. This work is proceeding under the superintendence of Major Kurlin, an experienced foreman of Col. Craighill's party.

From this point to the Temple farm, where the military camp is located, is a distance of about one mile, the road leading to which is being rapidly bordered by temporary wooden buildings of all styles,

Passing into the camp the scene was one of industry and improvement. The large walls of the "Paylilon," sixty feet in height, are rising and assuming shape, directly in front of the ground for the encampment of the troops. To the west of this building Mr. R. C. August 20, 1881.

My Dear Father: We arrived here
July 4, after a long and tiresonie journey of thirty-four days. in good health and spirits and with no accident beyond the breaking of the ambulance axle. Our party consisted of Messrs. Campbell and Edward Carrington, Walter Floyd, Frank Snyder, Gen. Bee and self. Carringtons and Snyder rode horses while I drove with the General and Floyd in the ambulance. Floyd was an old class-mate and college caum of Carrington, and poor fellow, was in the last stages of consumption. Given up by the doctors, his last resort was the climate of Mexico. But with all our care, the fatigues and discomfits of the trip were too much for his enteebled condition. He died very quietly about three weeksafter our arrival, and was buried in the churchyard at Ynde. He was an unmarrisch manabout 32 years old, a noble, whole-souled tellow, and, like all consumptives, had great hopes of getting well.

After a few days of rest, we packed, and Ed. Carrington, myself and one of the Commander Lynch and their advisors know too well that if Peru is evacuated no terms of peace would be observed, and hence the armed possession continued.

The Peruvians still hope that the United States will assume a protectorate and gather up the revenues and pledge their payment to the creditors and somehow attend to their affairs and get them out of difficulties. They never dream that they will have to cede any territory in payment of the losses of the war begun by themselves.
